THE CONDEMNED SENTINEL.
A cold, stormy night in the month of March 1867, Marshal Lefebvre, with twenty-seven thousand French troops had invested Dantz. The city was garrisoned by seventeen thousand Russian and Prussian soldiers; and these thousands of men, with their well armed officers, picked out double the force which could be brought to the assault. So there was need of the utmost vigilance on the part of the sentinels, for a desperate sortie from the garrison made unwary, might prove calamitous.
At midnight Jerome Dubois was placed upon one of the most important posts in the advance line of pickets, it being upon a narrow strip of land rising above the marshy flat, called the Peninsula of Nehring.
For more than an hour he paced his post, without hearing anything but the moaning of the wind, and the driving of the rain. At length, however, another sound broke upon his ear. He stopped and listened, and he called, "Who's there?" The only answer was a moaning sound.

He called again, and this time he heard something like the cry of a child; and presently the object came into the front of his eyes.
With a quick, emphatic movement he brought his musket to charge, and ordered the intruder to halt.
"Mercy!" exclaimed a childish voice. "Don't shoot me! I am Natalia. Don't you know me?"
Heaven's! cried Jerome, elevating the muzzle of his piece. "Is it you, child?"

"Yes, you are good Jerome," said the child, "and help mamma.
Come, she is dying!"
It was certainly Natalia, a little girl only eight years old, daughter of Jerome's wife. She was the daughter of Pierre Villant, a sergeant in Jerome's own regiment, and was in the army in capacity of nurse.

"Why have I this, my child?" said Jerome, taking the little one by the arm. "What is it about your mother?"
"Oh, good Jerome, you can hear her now! Hark!"

The child bent her ear, but could hear only the wind and the rain.
"Mamma is in the dreadful mud," said the child, "and is dying. She is far away. Oh, I can hear her crying."

By degrees, Jerome gathered from Natalia that her father had taken her out with him in the morning, and that in the evening when the storm came on, her mother came after her.
The child said that she had seen a man back to the camp with his wife, but she preferred to return alone, feeling sure that she should meet with no trouble. The way, however, had become dark and uncertain, and she had lost the path, and wandered off to the edge of the morass, where she sunk in the mud.

"Oh, good Jerome," cried the little one, "don't shoot me! I am Na-
the muzzle of his piece. "Is it you,
